Types of school

Public or state schools are secular, with free tuition, and fully funded by the state. They follow the local curriculum approved by the Catalan authorities in accordance with the Spanish Education Act. The Catalan education system is of high quality and is based on equity and excellence. For this reason, many international families find this attractive and choose the local system for their children.

Private schools are privately owned and managed and may be secular or religious. They are divided into two types:

Fully private schools receive no subsidies from the Catalan government, so their fees are borne mainly or entirely by the families concerned. Each private school has its own enrolment process and entry criteria, so any families that are interested in these schools should contact them directly for further information.

Another type of private school are escoles concertades, which are state assisted, meaning they receive public funding from the Catalan government to cover part of the students' fees. Additional educational costs are borne by the families, but these are generally lower than those of non-subsidised private schools. Concertades are required to follow the local education system closely, meet certain legislative criteria and adopt the same annual enrolment process as state schools.

Languages and curricula

International families should note that both Catalan and Spanish are the official languages in Catalonia. Both languages are used in the state-education system, although Catalan is the main language of instruction. After completing compulsory schooling (from 6 to 16 years of age), students are fluent in both languages and have an adequate knowledge of at least one foreign language.

Like public schools, concertades also use Catalan as the main language of instruction, but there are some exceptions to this.

Non-subsidised private schools also teach Catalan and Spanish, but usually use a different language as the main language of instruction, such as English or French, among others.

This publication lists the schools in Barcelona and its surrounding areas that have been selected for inclusion for their recognised foreign or international curriculum or specialism in foreign languages.

Although it has been created with international families in mind, anyone with an interest in multilingual schooling and international curriculums or academic qualifications should find this a valuable resource.
